

U.S. CATHOLIC BISHOPS Five Principles to Guide Immigration Policy

*In the drama of the Family of Nazareth
we perceive the sorrowful plight of so many migrants ...
[T]he human person must always be the focal point in the vast field of international migration.*

— Pope Benedict XVI World Day of Migrants and Refugees 2007

The U.S. Catholic Bishops have identified five principles that should act as a guide for policymakers in creating immigration reform legislation. The principles are:

1. Persons have the right to find opportunities in their homeland.

This principle states that a person has a right not to migrate. In other words, economic, social, and political conditions in their homeland should provide an opportunity for a person to work and support his or her family in dignity and safety. In public policy terms, efforts should be made to address global economic inequities through just trade practices, economic development, and debt relief. Peacemaking efforts should be advanced to end conflict which forces persons to flee their homes.

2. Persons have the right to migrate to support themselves and their families.

When persons are unable to find work and support themselves and their families, they have a right to migrate to other countries and work. This right is not absolute, as stated by Pope John XXIII, when he said this right to emigrate applies when “there are just reasons for it.” In the current condition of the world, in which global poverty is rampant and political unrest has resulted in wars and persecution, migrants who are forced to leave their homes out of necessity and seek only to survive and support their families must be given special consideration.

3. Sovereign nations have a right to control their borders.

The Church recognizes the right of nations to protect and control their borders in the service of the common good of their citizens. However, this is not an absolute right. Nations also have an obligation to the universal common good, as articulated by Pope John XXIII in Pacem in Terris, and thus should seek to accommodate migration to the greatest extent possible. Powerful economic nations, such as the United States, have a higher obligation to serve the universal common good, according to Catholic social teachings. In the current global economic environment, in which labor demands in the United States attract foreign laborers, the United States should establish an immigration system that provides legal avenues for persons to enter the nation legally in a safe, orderly, and dignified manner to obtain jobs and reunite with family members.

4. Refugees and asylum seekers should be afforded protection.

Persons who flee their home countries because they fear persecution should be afforded safe haven and protection in another country. Conflict and political unrest in many parts of the world force persons to leave their homes for fear of death or harm. The United States should employ a refugee and asylum system that protects asylum seekers, refugees, and other forced migrants and offers them a haven from persecution.

5. The human rights and the human dignity of undocumented migrants should be respected.

Persons who enter a nation without proper authorization or who overstay their visas should be treated with respect and dignity. They should not be detained in deplorable conditions for lengthy periods of time, shackled by their feet and hands, or abused in any manner. They should be afforded due process of the law and, if applicable, allowed to articulate a fear of return to their home before a qualified adjudicator. They should not be blamed for the social ills of a nation.

We Pray for Just Immigration Reform

We pray for the grace of a new perspective and the ability to see and hear a different voice in the immigration debate.

We ask for the clarity of vision to see the false projections and misportrayals of honest people seeking life.

Help us to reject and silence the divisive and dehumanizing political rhetoric surrounding immigration.

Enlarge our vision to see real people, not labels; to recognize with dignity the human beings who long for security, for safety, for the well being of their families so they can thrive.

We pray for all those who have lost their lives in their search for a better life. We pray for families who suffer such losses and grieve for loved ones.

May we remember that the duty to protect and promote the sacredness of all life is in our hands. May we be advocates for humanity, not judges patrolling the borders of our collective fear. We ask this in the name of Jesus the Christ, whose border crossing brings us all to abundant life.
